How Tata bought JLR, and why the date was significant for Ratan Tata

The author tells the story of momentous takeover of the iconic automobile brand

TATA MOTORS' PATH was strewn with many challenges. Adverse newspaper reports of the stoked fear and apprehension among the Jaguar and Land Rover employees about the possible pitfalls of the ownership passing into Indian hands. Less than a year earlier, too, during the Corus acquisition, British newspapers had commented that extending credit to the Tata Group was risky. Ratan was advised patronisingly to 'pray' for deliverance. This time, too, it was no different, except that some newspapers also tried to quote some supposedly anonymous views from India to buttress their negative discourse. Some suspected that this was an effort to either scare the group away or at least portray to the seller that the Tatas may not be the best choice.

Across the Atlantic too, there were many critics. Among the first to target the Indian conglomerate was a group of dealers of the Jaguar brand. Ken Gorin, chairman of the US Jaguar Business Operations Council, ridiculed the possible acquisition, saying: 'I don't know that the United States consumer is ready to deal with a premium brand like Jaguar being owned by an Indian company... When we think about India, we think about a Third World country and people going to work on their bicycles.' He said that India was not the 'appropriate home market for the luxury marque'.

Jack Weidinger, whose family had been running a Jaguar dealership outside of New York since 1938, and who was also in the Jaguar Business Operations Council, says he had heard his colleagues were 'insecure' when they heard the news of the Tatas buying the brands. He knows several people who had asked: 'What do the Indians know about running a global car company?'

Faced with the open opposition, Ratan stepped in to reassure sceptics that the Tatas could turn around the two brands. He told The Times, 'How a company manages products in different sectors is the key. Toyota created Lexus, Nissan has Infiniti. No one is saying, "How can BMW handle the Mini?" but they've made a huge success of it. So why is it impossible?'

But the casting doubts on the Tatas' capability and intentions unnerved the workforce of the two companies. The British labour leaders, representing about 16,000 Jaguar and Land Rover workers, were concerned about market positioning, outsourcing and safeguarding direct jobs.

Ratan once again took it upon himself to assuage their fears. As the head of the group, he reassured the workers that the change of ownership would not be prejudicial to their interests. Talking to Weidinger, he reiterated the Tata Group's philosophy of according high priority to safeguarding workers' interests. It would be the same in the UK as it was in India. He further emphasized that the Tatas were in the business for the long term. He said, 'We buy companies, we do not sell them.' He entrusted the task of re-energising Tata's reassurance to the workforce to Kant. 'Kant made two visits to the UK to assure the union that there would be no attempt to "Indianise" the companies and that Tata would continue to receive Ford engines and other parts for some time,' wrote The Wall Street Journal. Besides 'the companies' 16,000-strong workforce, the labour unions were also concerned about safeguarding the '40,000 jobs' mainly in the supplier industry connected with JLR. Kant allayed any fears that they may have harboured about losing their jobs. He pledged that should the group win the bid, it would not 'export UK-based jobs to lower cost factories in India.' He also assured them that Tata Motors was willing to 'assume full responsibility of the Jaguar and Land Rover pension schemes' and that both would continue to remain 'one British brand'. Elaborating later, Kant says that because of their brand value, it made pragmatic sense not to alter their identity. 'Its brand loyalty was fierce,' he recalls. In this context, Ratan also told the Los Angeles Times, 'We believe it is the duty of whoever owns them to nurture the image, to retain their touch and feel... They are British brands—and they should remain British.'

The acquisition was a 'real estate proposition' and 'everybody would be out of a job.' Faced with this situation, Ratan once again stepped in directly. He held 'three or four town-hall meetings with the employees' where he killed the speculations, directly answering the questions that the workers had. He personally assured them that the Tatas would see them as partners and 'work shoulder-to-shoulder' to bring back Jaguar and Land Rover to its glories.

He stated in an interview to The Times, 'We do not create a trauma within the company we take over.'

The meetings held by Kant and Ratan had a salutary effect on the workforce. The trade unions responded by supporting the Tata bid. On 22 November 2007, Unite, Britain's largest trade union in the auto sector, issued a statement in favour of the Tatas. Tony Woodley, its joint general secretary, said: '... the best interests of the workforce would be served by finding a partner with an established presence and background in manufacturing... The stewards agreed that the Tatas best fit these criteria. The Indian representatives further added that Tata Motors was "the only company" among the final bidders "with enough money, clout and experience" in the automotive industry to successfully manage the brands.'

By December 2007, reports surfaced that Ford would announce its decision early the following year. There was strong speculation that the preferred choice would be Tata Motors. Newspaper reports suggested that the company's offer was 'said to be in the range of $1.8

bn–$2.2 bn (€908 m–€1.1 bn)'.

The next month, Lewis Booth, executive vice president of Ford Europe and Premier Automotive Group (PAG), issued a statement saying: 'Ford is committed to focused negotiations at a more detailed level with Tata Motors concerning the potential sale of the combined Jaguar Land Rover assets.'

Courage of Conviction

For Ratan and the Tata Group, 25 March 2008 was a red-letter day. On that day, Tata Motors signed the agreement with Ford Motor Company to buy its luxury brands, Jaguar and Land Rover. It signalled the change that three months earlier The Economist had predicted would come about, that the 'future of these two grand old badges will be shaped not in Coventry, cradle of the British motor industry, but in Pune, home of Tata Motors.' The signing took place in Birmingham with Kant, Gandhi and Ramakrishnan representing Tata Motors. Ratan had hurt his back and could not attend in person, although he was connected through a video link. It was an all-cash deal, for about $2.3 billion (€1.15 billion). 'People may say anything but it was a steal,' says Kant.

Ratan could hardly conceal his joy. The date was a memorable one for him for another reason too, though he said nothing of it: It is doubtful if he even made the connection—it was on this day, seventeen years ago, that he had taken over as chairman, Tata Sons.
